FORTUNE-FAVORED.

HOW JOHN JACOB ASTOR LAID THE FOUNDATION OF HIS WEALTH.

Bouanza Mackey as an Investor-A Fortunate Fermit - Mrs. Mackey's Annual Espenditures in Paris-The Oht Man Talks.

1New York Graphic. Speaking of John Jacob Astor the first, I can not help realizing the memory of conversations I have heard between him and my father when I was a boy.

"I'copie think," said the old man, "that I have had an easy time of it, but that's a miatake. My early life was a hard struggle, and even my own brother refuse i to lend me money. This brother was a butcher named Henry, protty well off, with a stail in the Bare market-or Bear market as it got to be afterward called-and writhel under John Jacob's borrowings. One day, when the latter went to him for $200, Henry said: "John, I'll willingly give you $100 if you will promise me that you will never come to me again to borrow."

"I closed with the offer at once, and took the money," said Astor, laughing heartly. I have heard him tell how he got his first start in life. He kept his store in Feck Slip, and there bought furs, almost any that were offered him, until he had a stock packed awey that he could not realize on. What to do he did not know, but consulting with his wife, as he always did about everything, the conclusion was that he should go to london and sell thear himself. This was carried out, and John Jacob carried his furn to London and made a good thing of it. While there, and wandering over the great city, he came across what was known as the East India House or Company, and recognized a name as chief of it as one familiar. He sought him and found a schoolmate in his native place in Germany. He schoolmate did not repudiate him, but tried to do everything he could to make Aster feel "lat he wanted to serva him, and, among the rest when he was leaving gave blm a permit for a ship to trade in the China was. John Jacob laughed at the gift, but took it, and had almost forgotten its possession, when one day something he heard made him go to a merhe find capital to fit out a ship and use the permit, and they should share the result. Livermore, at first rejecting the proposal, afterward accepted it, and the voyage successfully untertaken, and from it Astor roalisad $50,000. Then he took the permit and titte lout a vessel himself and lall the foundation of his outrmous fortune, John Jacob never denied that he owed his success in a large measure to the fact that he aiwaya consulted with his wife, whom I remember as a clevr-hoatel, practical woman.

|Chicago Tribune The current number of Science contains a letter from Mr. C. H. Murray to l'rofessor Haird, describing what he saw under the shade of some willows skirting a shallow place in a creek in the Gunnison valley, Colorado. A small swarm of musquitoes was circling over the weter, where some fresh-hatched mountain-trout were readlly discernible. Every few minutes the bahy trout would rise to the surface of the water, and remain there an instant, with the tip of the head exposel. A musquite would at once alight upon the shining spot, and transfix the trent by inserting its proboscis, or bill, into the brain of the dsh, which apfrom the tront's body. When this was accomplished the load trout windt turn over on his back and float down the stronm. The observer witnessed the murler of twenty trout in this manner in the course of half nu hour.

A Little "Mucliage" Amendment-

181. Paul Ploneer Pre 8. Early legislation in Minnesota was not ontirely wanting in amusing or novel featnres. A munbor of the house, still living, was a momber of the engressing committee, and finding a bill in which he was personally interested, drew an innendment materfally changing its provisions and attached it to the bill without netifying any of his associates. "II. F. No.-" was reported back as correctly engros of, but another member who was also personally interested, detected the unauthorized interpolation and, rushing up to the blant emprit, exclaimed: "What does this meant That clause was not in when the bill passed the hou se." The uri me committeeman replied without a blush: "Oh, I put that in. It is nothing but one of those -- little nucilage amondments, and it don't amount to any

Stock in Trade.

[Mexican Cor. New York Sun.] On the divide we are 10,000 feet above the sea. Now look back on the vast valley. Every dotail is lost. There is only a great sweep of green, thinly velled here and there city. by stronks of mist, shading into purple and blue, llow wide the outlook ist It seems endless, because the further limit is undlstlaguishable from the sky, and a long way it is, seventy-live miles, as the crow illes, to the famous volcanoes, only visible now as their snowy tops catch the sun, and with difficulty distinguishable from the cloud crosts behind. From our lofty vantage ground we command two valleys. This to the westward is the valley of the Lerma, one of the longest of the Mexican rivers, dominated by its own lofty peak, the extinct volcano of Nevada de Toluca. As the train winds in and out minong the plue covored hills, catching glumpses that of one and then of the other valley, one needs to keep his bearing well to know which for the moment lles beneath him.

The descent into the valley of the Lorma is even more delightful than the ascent from Mexico. The prospect is not perhaps so comprehensive, but one drops down more abruptly and sees things more distinctly. At intervals of our long spins around mule shoe curves cut in the face of the mountain, in the course of which we almost completely encircled two old towns so close that we could fairly see down into the court yards of the houses. The eye took in an humense stretch of valley, cultivated to its full capacity, marked off with rows of maguey or century plants, and alternating in plants of red soil, freshly tilled, and in green and yellow blocks of grain. The whole city of which we now get, with each opening of the bills, a distincter view, is Toluca. The ride over the mountains in the intervals where the broader prospects just described, are cut off, is will and picturesque in the extreme. You spin around curves and up end down grades which would be utterly impracticable with any but a narrow gauge, with any engine but one all driving wheels and the best air-brake equipment. You plunge into a tunbridge in a way so like n leap into the air as to startle you. In the valley of the Lerma are great haclendas, with archel gateways and red-tiled roofs, and projecting rifle towers at the corners—veritable fortroses. You may be sure the wealthy don who owns lt, has a vassalage like a fendal lord and vast flocks, and that when he visits the market at Toluca, he wears a sombrero covered with gold or silver luce, and a full plut of silver buttons down the outer seam of his closefitting brooches, and has a heavily chased revolver at either hip. file heavily and richly caparisoned horse with bear-kln-covered flanks and allver-mounted trappings is not less gorgeous than himself.

My destination on this trip was a little old town in the mountains, back from the railroad, 100 miles from Mexico. There have been immes in and about El Oro since before chant named lavermore and propose that the conquest, so that it is a settled community, with inherited notions of its own. One sees paniar-laden donkeys in the streets, women coming and going with jers on their heads to the old fountain in the plaza, and the piga enjoy the freedom of the town. There is neither hotel nor inn. Why should there bel The natives never go any where, why should anybody come to them! Of the S,000 estimated population, not above a score, I dare say, have ever been lifty miles from home. The plaza is shadel by tall gum or encalyptus trees, such as you see everywhere in Mexico. For years the people heve labored in the shafts and tunnels, and for years, on Sundays, the Indians on the bills and haciendas about have brought their supplies and held market in the plaza. One of these markets is a quaint apactacle. Nothing in Mexico has seemed to me more picture-que an I more suggestive of the conditions of the Mexican social problem. The Indians begin to pour in from all directions with the that light, some, indeed, to secure favorable locations, bave compad on the spots where you find them, When I arived, at 9 o'clock the day I attended, 300 or 400 persons were already assembled, seated about in rows on the hard flagging with their wares spread out before them. It was a pleasing picture, with its setting of low, tile-roofed, whitewashed adobes, the parently was completely paralyzed and unable to escape. The persecutor would not relax its grip, but, holding its victim as in vice, would extract all the vital juices from the trout's lock. When this warfer Ish ndimixture, is not ill looklug, and Juan, fulls white cottons, santals, and broad brimmel straw hat and zeraps carried jauntily on his arm, and Cancia in her single short gown, girdled at the want, with bust and shoulders indifferently covored, both possess points of beauty for the artist whose eye is not too exacting. A low hum of conversation tills the air. From half n dozen thes smoke and fames ascend from cauffrons to which lard is being fried out, and a cloud of chalf surrounds the peldiers of main, they winnowing their grain by tessing it into the nir in the intervals of trade. Umbrellas are exteniperize l of mints, and the dealers in fuelble sweets protect their wares from the sun by atthizing their

One increase at the possible demand for these old keys, old pictures, old nondescript articles of all sorts, survivals from old Spain, heirlooms, may be, about to be secrified to the owners' needs. Little of the trade is of proportions demanding aught but coppers, and to change a fo-centiary prece—the national dime—would break almost any dealer, for more things will be carried away than soil, only to impear agast on successive market days. to uppear agast ou successive market days. THE STANFORD INTERIOR JOURNAL announces that it will have nothing more to do with advertising agents, as It has found them to be frauds and cheats. With a few honorable exceptions the Record has found them to be swindlers. We have long desired that the Kentucky Press A sociation hold a strictly business meeting to consider the interest of the publishers, and provide means to guard against the swindling advertising agents, as well as to compare methods of doing business, etc. The meetings beretofore bave been devoted to esting and drinking. We trust that some day the publishers of this State will realize the benefits to be derived from a business meeting similar to those held in other States, with no drinking allowed, and none but members admitted .- [Nelson Record-

H. C. RUPLBY.

He vas not a favorite with his flock; but he was by no means unpopular. The poor loved him, for his band was always ready to go to his pocket at a tale of distress, lim Ited as were his means, and his reproofs were always of the mildest sort. The rich, though they had fittle to say for him, had nothing to say against him. Tiley invited him frequently to their houses, entertained him handsomely, and bore very complacently with his habit of falling into & brown study at the dinner table. As for the younger portion of his flock, his good looks, his rich chestnut hair, and dreamy eyes had early impressed them profoundly, and they sang his praises without stint.

It was a source of regret to many of the young ladies—and a few of the older ones that Mr. Brown was a married man. Many years before he had come to the church at Barstow, he had wedded a gentle, sweettempered girl, who fairly worshiped him, and who preved herself a good wife and a devoted mother. Their weddel life had flowed on as calmly as a meriow brook, undisturbed by any petty domestic jars or troubles, It had never occurred to Mr. Brown that it might not go on so forever. He did not notice his wife's failing health, and as she was one of the kind who never complain, he was utterly unprepared for her death. It stupefied him; he could not understanl it. It seemed to him incredible, impossible, and he felt bewildered and half puzzled even when he heard the sods falling on the coffin.

He went back to his lonely home with his two little girls, and shut himself up in his study, where he lay down on the well-worn lonnge, a dull pain in his head. It seemed to him that his lost Laura must know how much he needed her. He could not realize that she was gone. He lay there, halfexpecting to see her euter and to feel her tender touch on his brow, soothing away the pain es he had often done when he was brain weary. But hour after hour went by, and no one came near him, and he heard only the voice of his children as they talked loudly to the cook in the kitchen.

The next day he went out as usual, pur suing his accustomed round of duties as tranquilly and patiently as ever. His par-lshiouers were loul in their expressions of admiration to each other as they saw how well he bore his great sorrow, and they were very kind to him, especially in the matter in Harstow. It was talked over at the meetings of the sewing circle, the reading club, and the Indian Relief association, and it was unanimously agreed that the best thing the poor widower could do was to employ a governess, who would also act as housekeeper and general manager.

there were many applicants for it. It was blow which was to fall upon her. decided that only a middle-aged, respectahle, Quiet woman, who would be incapable % scheming to flil the late Mrs. Brown's place, and who would be competent to take charge of the little girls, would do, and such a one was hard to find.

It was Miss Anastasia Bowen who at length found just the right person, and as Mr. Brown was willing to do just what Miss Bowen thought best, that lady took the responsibility of installing Miss Suran Piper In the parsonage without further delay.

Miss Piper was neither old nor young; she had no pretensious whatever to good looks, and she was so exceedingly shy that if the minister spoke to her on even the most trivial topic she blushed as red as a peouy. But these, said Miss Anastasia, were such trifling drawbacks as almost to be looked upon in the light of advantages unler the circumstances.

Miss l'.per was, as Mr. Brown soon saw, a very good we men, exceedingly consciention; and painstaking. She dil her best for the two little girls—healthy, happy, protty little greatures of 9 and 11 years—who learned the simple lesson she gave them from pure love for her, not because they feared her displeasure.

Probably there was no lady la Barstow who took a deeper interest in the household affairs of the bereavel widower than Miss Anastasia Brown. She was, in spite of the fact that youth had long since left her, of a sentimental turn of mind, and the pale, high-brod face and gentle manners of Mr. Brown had inspired her with an intenso adbls wife, repende into an undisguised attackment which was patent to every one but the of ject of it. Not a chance did the spraster loss of seeing her idel, and searcely a day passed that she did not run luto the paramage on one excuso or another.

But the minister, absorbed in his books and the memory of his dead Laura, was utterle and subliminaly uncon-clous of the passion we had inspiret. The lien of a second marriage had never entered his mind. He never even asked himself whether he liked Mis, Howen or uot, but so constantiv did she press her advice respecting every subject upon him that be grew to depend upon her in a great measure, and often consulted her upon different household and church matters, never touching, Lowever, in any matter whatever upon the subject of matrimony.

The fact that she was making no head way in spate of her tireless efforts, in spate of the attentious she iavished upon the two little gurls, at last dawned upon MI-s Anastasla, and she set herself to work to discover the reason. She came to the conclusion, after a careful review of the ground, that Mr. Brown was too comfortable by far. Miss Piper uttended most as duondy to his creature comforts, and the society of his children prevented any feeling of great landines.

"He wouldn't hold out a month if he was left atterly alone," meditated the amb.tious laty. "If he had no one to see aft r him or to take to, he'd to apt to think of me. Thera's no one else he'd turn to. Ile's one of the kind to take what comes nearest and is me t convenient."

In which last conclusion Miss Ana-tasia was quite right, as my story will prove. She decided that no time was to be lost, and that it was best to bigin operations nt once. So after carefully mapping out a course faction, she repaired to the parsource and a ked boldly to see Mr. Brown privately.

Mr. Tip r, meck and humble as usual, exhibited no surprise at the request, but nade haste to show the visitor at ence into the minister's study, where he sat reading at his desk.

The intention of "having a talk" on some Important subject was written plainly on her hard, lean face, and Mr. Brown laid lown his book at once and prepared to listen to whatever she had come to say. "I hope I'm not disturbing you, Mr. Brown," began Anastasia, with a little nervous cough as she took a seat. She felt quite agitated, and an unwonted color brightenel her sallow cheek. Her mission was so important, so much hung upon Its success, that it was not strange she was not quite as calm as usual.

"No, ch no," answered Mr. Brown, with a faint sigh, as he glancel at his beloved book. "I am always glad to have you come. I hope there is nothing wrong?" anxiously.

"The truth is, Mr. Brown, I've come to see you about the girls. They are not managed as well as I could wish. Miss Piper is a good woman, but she can't have the authority a-a-mother would have, you know, and she lets them do about as they please, and they are growing up rudo and

Mr. Brown looked startled. It did not occur to him to question Miss Anastasia's statements. He took them in good faith always, teing simple enough to believe her to have his interests at heart.

"Why, you were the one who recom-mended Miss Piper to me," he said at length, and I have been well satisfied with her. "She does the best she knows how," said Miss Anastasla, "but she hasn't sufficient authority to govern them properly. Ah, poor little creatures, they need the care of a mother.

This was a bold stroke, A flush rose to the minister's high, pale brow, but he gave no other sign of emotion. Any reference to his dead wife pained him, even now that she had lain in her grave two years, but of course he did not say so.

"You are very kind to take such an interest," he murmured a little indistinctly. "What would you advise!"

"I would advise their being sent to boardschool, Mr. Brown. I have a friend who keeps a very select seminary at Woodstock. She will be delighted to take charge of Flora and Annie, I am sure."

"I should not like to part with them," said Brown meditatively. "And-and-would become of Miss Piperi i Mr. wouldn't like to hurt her feelings, and she loves the girls dearly."

"There'd be no cause for her to feel hurt. Tell her simply that force of circumstances compels you to dismiss her. A month's notice will be sufficient,"

"It will be very unpleasant," said the minister in trepidation. "And where will she go? She has no home but this, and not a relative in the world,"

"She must find another situation," said Miss Anastasia. "She can begia at once to look for one. You can tell her of the contemplated change this evening," and after promising to write at once to the principal of the seminary at Woodstock, Miss Anastasia left, walking home in a state of bliss bordering on ecstasy. She felt sure that she had put in the first wedge that would lift her toward a house in the parsonage, and already began to plan the changes she would make in its arrange-

Itut a shadow had been throws over Mr. Brown's peaceful life. His soul was filled with despair unutterable at the thought of that conversation he must have with Miss Piper. The mere possibility of her shedding tears made a shudder run through his of advice. His "distressing situation" was frame. He could not make up his mind to the subject of debate in almost every house speak to her, and day after day passed, untii it lacked only two weeks of the time when the seminary was t open. Then at

He came into the sitting-room, where she at darning his socks by the light of a studeut lamp, the girls having gone to bed. He pushed open the door of the sitting-room again, but started back concienco-stricken, for Miss Piper, with her face buried in her arms, was kneeling by nuration for him, which, after the death of the sofa, while a melancholy sound of sobbing and crying, pittful to hear, filled the

A deep flush dyed the pale face of the little governes . "Oh, no. 1 couldn't, indeed," she cried, in a horror-stricken tone. "It would be impossible."

"You might-stay as my wife, Miss l'iper," cr.el poor Mr. Brown, desperately. "Oh, Mr. Brown, you don't mean it! And thus it was that the minister's second marriage came about,

I need hardly say that Miss Anastasla was furious. No words could adequately describe her surprise and chagrin. The very course she had taken with a view to justalling herself in the personage had installed Miss Piper there. All her plens had come to naught. Her castles in the air had fallen to the ground with a crash. Her visits to the parsonage ceased entirely. She no longer considered it necessary to advise and counsel Mr. Brown.

The minister never found cause to regret his second marriage. The little governess provel a devoted, dutiful wife and a falthful stepmother, and she never dreamed on what a slender thread her happiness had hung, nor could linagine why it was that Miss Anastasia Bowen treated her as a mortal enony.

Mand &'s Fastest Half-Mile.

[Chleago News.] Although the Associated press says that Maul & made the fastest half-mile on record during her recent trot against time at Narragansett park, there is a tradition that has been accepted by horsemen hereabouts that a faster half-mile than 1:03% was trotted at Chicago five years ago. Strange as it may appear Maud S. herself participated in the event. If she could be consulted about the matter she would probably tell her present admirers that oue pleasant afternoon, noteworthy in the trotting calendar as the day when she first beat 2:11, she trotted from the quarter-pole to the three quarter pole in 1:03 tlat. That was Sept. is, isso, and horsemen are fond of telling how the queen of the turf crushed all rec ords, and almost outstripped time itself, on the Chicago track that day.

Two days before she had tried to beat 2:11%, and falled by a quarter of a second. But on that auspicious day she started on her journey at a moderate gait, arriving at the quarter pole in 34% seconds. Then she straightened out for the half, and sped down the backstretch like e. chestnut streak. The half-mile pole was reached in 3)% secon is, and the spectators on the grand stand could hardly believe their stop watches. On she went along the lower turn at an amazing pace. When the three-quarter pole was reached all the watches showed 1:37% from the start. If the first quarter be subtracted from this it will show a faster half mile than was made at Narragansett park, or has ever been made any where else -to-wit: 1:03. Then she weut on and completed the mile in 33 seconds-demonstrating that Maul S. was the fastest trotter in the world. She has gained little, if any thing, in speed since then, although with greater maturity she has been able to lower the record two clear seconds.

But others rebound in their dream. They soar on forever in tiction and desire even though "quand meme") that all may be attained. They work themselves into a fever, they triumph. The struggle will take place every Well, every day they struggle and never tire.

It is too generally believed that actors "lot go" of their characters after ten or fif-teen performances. The mistake is a gross one. Sophio Crolzette, after the famous poison scene in "The Sphynx," remained for everal moments quite pale ani with chattering treth. Sometimos she became lasensible. And during 100 consecutive perform mees she never thought of mastering her emotions.

One evening I was free and went to see Aimse Tes-undier in her dressing-room after the sleep-walking scene of "Mucbeta," I found her quite cold and still trembling. It was, however, the Eftisth performance of the great work.

Finally, for my part, I have never played l'helre without fainting or spitting blood, and after the fourth scene of "Theodora," in which I kill Marcellus, I am in such a state of herveusness that I go up to my dressing-room sobbing. If I do not weep and have a nervous fit, much more disagreeable for those who surround mo and more dangerous for the objects within reach of my hand, my groat comrades, the actors of life, will cry: "That Is not great ortl'

Or to tran-late, one must feel nothing. Diderot said so. Coquelin also. They were doubtless both r ght, and the proof is that Coquelin is an admirable actor and a very great artist. Hut what does It metter! I retain my madness. The others, les vibrants. We must needs helleve in order to make others believe. Our real life is there in the incandescent green-room of every passion lived or dreamed of. It is the perpetual beating of the heart. The incessant working of the brain. Many a mother, startled in the night by the ominous sounds of Croup, finds the little sufferer, with red and swellen face, gasping for air. In such cases Aver's Cherry Pectoral is invaluable, Mrs. Enuna Gedney, 159 West 128 st., New York, writes: "While In the country, fast winter, my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with Croup; it seemed as If he would die from strangulation. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was tried in small and frequent closes, and, in less than half an bour, the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Pectoral saved my darling's life." Mrs. Chas. B. Lundon, Gullford, Conn., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and also the life of my little son. As he is troubled with Croup, I dare not be without this remedy in the house." Mrs. J. Gregg, Lowell, Mass., writes: "My children have repeatedly taken Ayer's Cherry Peetoral for Coughs and Croup. It gives immediate relief, followed by cure." Mrs. Mary E. Evans, Scranton, Pa., writes: "I have two little boys, both of whom have been, from infancy, subject to violent attacks of Croup. About six months ago we began using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it acls like a charm. In a few minutes after the child takes it, he breathes easily and rests well. Every mother ought to know what a blessing i have found in Ayer's Cherry Pectorai." Mrs. Wur. C. Reid, Freehold, N. J., writes: "in our family, Ayer's medicines have been blessings for many years. ts nature's own remody, made from roots gathered from the forests of Georgia. The method by which It is made was obtained by a half-fererd from the Crack tudians who inhabited a certain portion of Georgia, which was communicated to one of the early settiers, and thus the formula has been banded down to the present day. The above cut represents the method of manufacture twenty years ago, by Mr. U. T. Swift, one of the present proprieters. The demand has been gradually lucreasing until a $100,600 laboratory is new necessary to supply the trade. A foreign demand has been created and enlarged lacifities will be nivessary to meet it.
